

RACIAL INJUSTICE VIRTUAL TOWN HALL - RECAP

On July 29, MASC hosted a virtual Town hall on Racial Injustice. The town hall included a question and answer session with passionate and knowledgeable panelists as well as breakout sessions afterward. This town hall was given a 4 or 5 out of 5 star rating from everyone! 90% of people felt like the conversations “ Through sharing their experiences, the panelists conveyed how each of us should embrace that we have a unique journey depending on our upbringing and how, as student leaders, have a powerful platform that we can utilize to enact little changes that make a large difference.

were appropriate, with some noting the engaging discussions that took place during the meeting.

The panel, which was comprised of an activist, a political science major at Howard, an educator, and a school board member, offered an array of ideas and tips. With half the panel being previous student council members, they were able to offer advice for students hoping to get involved in the movement.

MASC ADVANCE - RECAP

MASC Advance looked a little different this year. Instead of a three day, two-night training program, the workshop presenter certification process and executive board meeting were condensed into two zoom calls over two days.

On August 4, students from all across Maryland virtually attended MASC’s annual workshop presenter certification. New and returning students engaged in meaningful discussion about the duties and responsibilities of workshop presenters, creating effective visuals to understanding that virtual workshops are presented differently than in-person workshops. MASC takes certifying our student workshop presenters very seriously. Thus, students that participated will have to pass a learning check in order to be certified to present at workshops at MASC major conferences.

Advance concluded on August 6 with an executive board meeting. The board met virtually to discuss upcoming events, this year’s MASC theme, new legislation and much more.

MASC AND CORONAVIRUS (COVID-19)

All MASC events are currently being hosted virtually.

MASC is closely monitoring the rapidly evolving situation regarding COVID-19. Student health and safety has been and remains our main priority.
